The facts in the case are these. In the month of September, 1864, Gen. Gillem's command was stationed at Bull's Gap, Tenn, and on the night of the 3d of September a boy whom the enemy had captured and who had effected his escape, came to our camp and informed General Gillem that General Morgan intended to attack him the next morning; whereupon Colonel Ingerton was dispatched with the Thirteenth Tennessee cavalry to out off the enemy at Greenville, and after marching all night came within one and a half miles of Greenville, when he halted and formed his command in line of battle. During the time that said command was in line of battle, Colonel Ingerton, Adjutant Scott and myself captured a dispatch bearer, who was carrying his patch bearer, who was carrying dispatches from the rebel commandant at Blue Springs; said dispatch was directed to General John H. Morgan, widow Williams' residence, Greenville, Tenn, I was ordered at once with Company G, Thirtee ath Tennessee cavalry, to proceed to Greenville, and, if possible, capture Rosenbrook, two young men residing General Morgan, I, in accordance, proceeded to Greenville, and upon entering the town had my command The weapons used were pistols, and ises of the widow Williams without noise or difficulty. Having surrounded the premises, I ordered Sergeant Wilcox with seven men to search the house, and, on searching, the entire ST. Louis, August 28 .- A fatal en- and during the search General Morgan, counter occurred early this morning by some means, made his escape into near Fouden City in this county, her the garden without the notice of the near Foudon City, in this county, be-tween Louis Phillips and Jacob Rosenbrook, both residents of Bowl-General, I ordered Sergeant Wilcox ing Green township, in which the lat- and one man to explore the lot, and on entering the same they saw some wounded so badly that he died in a few hours afterward. The affair had its origin in a grudge of long standing, growing out of disrespectful remarks of grape vines. Pres. Campbell, who was an outside sentinel, discharged his piece at him, it taking sister. Each time they met they effect, entering his left hip, quarreled and yesterday merning they ranging along his spine and coming out at the left nipple. I was about twenty steps outside of the premises when the boys exclaimed that they had killed some one. I immediately Birchfield looking at him. I ordered them to turn him over and search him. Upon his person was found a letter addressed to General Morgan, Greenville, Tenn. I rode to the fence where I had the entire staff under guard, and informed Mr. Gray, his assistant Adjutant General, that I believed that it was General Morgan. The enemy pressing me, I ordered his remains to be placed on Campbell's horse (before him) and immediately started for the command, and met Colonel Miller with his brigade, where I had left the regiment, and turned the remains of General Morgan over to the surgeon of the brigade, who had his remains conveyed back to Mrs. Williams', at Greenville, where he was neatly and decently dressed, and surrendered on the 4th of September to a Confederate flag of truce. General Morgan, when shot, threw his pistols into a cluster of grape vines, which were afterwards found by Mrs. Colonel Fry, and turned over to
